A remarkable Inſtance of true Friendſhip: Taken from the Hiſtory of Poland.

One Faith, one Fame, one Fate ſhall both attend;
My Life's Companion, and my Boſom-Friend.
Dryd. Virg.

ADverſity alone is able to ſhew how rare and how valuable a Treaſure is a real Friend; there is nothing more common than the Apellation, but I fear 'tis little better than an abſtracted Idea, ſince we find thoſe adopt it who have no Regard to what the Profeſſion exacts, and make Uſe of the ſacred Title to cloack their Villainies and prey upon the Credulous. It is true that former Ages have furniſh'd us with ſome Examples of real Friendſhip, they are indeed but few; and they are admir'd even in the preſent Age, which I believe cannot produce one.

The Hiſtory of Poland gives us a beautiful Proof of the Power of this generous, diſintereſted and virtuous Paſſion, in the following Story.

Octavius and Leobellus, two young Gentlemen of Lithuania, were bred together from their Childhood, and their Fathers being near Neighbours in Wilna, the Capital of that Dutchy, theſe two were inſeparable Companions; this occaſion'd a Similitude of Mind, and by this uninterrupted Converſation they ſeem'd to have but one Will, or to be two Bodies actuated by one Soul: As they grew up, this Friendſhip became more conſpicuous, and Reaſon ſucceeding to ſtrengthen their Inclination, they were ſhewn as a Pattern of virtuous Amity

While they were at the Univerſity Octavius fell in Love with, and made his Addreſſes to Paulina; tho' this beautiful and virtuous Lady was a Match which Octavius, if he had conſulted his Reaſon, could not aſpire to with any Hopes of Succeſs, there being a great Diſproportion of Fortune between them, and therefore ought to have ſtifled his Paſſion in its Birth; yet as we flatter ourſelves in what we wiſh, and Love blinds us to all Obſtacles, Octavius ſaw no Difficulties but what he hop'd to get over, cou'd he engage the Affections of the young Lady. At the ſame Time Gelaſius a young Nobleman, whoſe Birth and Fortune were greatly ſuperior to Octavius, was recommended to the Relations of Paulina as a ſuitable Match; the Propoſal was readily embrac'd by them, and he was admitted publickly: This ſeem'd an inſuperable Difficulty for Octavius, but it prov'd to his Advantage, with Regard to the young Lady, who cou'd not bear with the Haughtineſs of a Lover who ſeem'd to think he rather did than receiv'd Honour in his Addreſſes; and this Pride of his was ſet in a ſtronger Light, by the reſpectful Deference Octavius paid her, who gain'd the Lady's Heart, whilſt the other caus'd her Averſion. Gelaſius piqu'd to find a cold Return, imagin'd he had a ſecret Rival, and ſoon diſcover'd that Octavius was the Man; he immediately took Fire and threatned him with the Effects of his Reſentment if he did not deſiſt; Octavius made ſlight of his Menaces and only anſwer'd, that as he was a Gentleman he did not think he was guilty of any Vanity in pretending to a Lady tho' every Way his Superior; that before Marriage Inclination was free, and if his Services could engage that of Paulina, it was not his Reſentment ſhou'd make him deſiſt; but if Gelaſius ſhou'd be happy enough to obtain her Hand, he wou'd then endeavour to remove her from his Heart.

Gelaſius hereupon employ'd the Authority of Paulina's Parents, who forbid her all farther Converſation with Octavius, and commanded her to look on Gelaſius as a Husband they deſign'd her, and a Nobleman whoſe Alliance did them Honour. This had ſuch an Effect on Paulina againſt a Lover, who inſtead of ſhewing a diſtant Reſpect began to impoſe on her the imperious Laws of a Husband, that ſhe avoided his Sight as much as poſſible, and left no Means uneſſay'd to converſe with Octavius.

Gelaſius perceiving the young Lady's Averſion to him rather augment than abate, reſolv'd to remove his Rival; he ſet Spies upon him, by whom he diſcover'd that he often entertain'd Paulina at her Window, when the reſt of the Family were in bed; enrag'd at this, he takes a Friend with him, call'd Megaſius, and a Servant on whoſe Courage and Fidelity he rely'd, and lay in Ambuſh for Octavius near Paulina's Houſe: He had not been long hid when Octavius came, accompany'd with his Friend Leobellus; having given the Signal Paulina came to the Window, and Leobellus went off to ſome little Diſtance, to give them the Liberty of unboſoming themſelves to each other.

Gelaſius, enrag'd at the Sight, reſolv'd to ſacrifice his Rival, and order'd the Servant to attack Leobellus, while he and Megaſius chaſtis'd the Inſolence of Octavius: The Servant fell with great Reſolution upon Leobellus, who receiv'd him with no leſs Courage, and at the ſecond Paſs laid him for dead; being here diſengag'd he ran to the Aſſiſtance of his Friend, who, with his Back to the Wall, maintain'd an unequal Fight; Leobellus grown furious with the Danger of his Friend, at the firſt Thruſt laid Gelaſius dead at his Feet, and turning upon Megaſius gave him a ſlight Wound in the Arm, upon which he ran away; Leobellus receiv'd no Hurt; but Octavius was wounded in a deſperate Manner.

The Claſhing of the Swords brought the Neighbours into the Street, who found Gelaſius dead, his Servant fetching the laſt Gaſp, and Leobellus ſupporting his Friend, who deſir'd to be carry'd to a Surgeon where he was dreſs'd and put to Bed. Megaſius in the mean time having given an Account of the Misfortune to the Relations of Gelaſius, in Terms greatly to his Advantage, laying his Death to the Treachery of the two Friends, who had aſſaulted him in the dark and unawares, they immediately had Recourſe to the Magiſtrates, who order'd the ſuppos'd Murderers to be ſeiz'd and impriſon'd: Octavius was taken, and, notwithſtanding the Condition he was in, carry'd to Jail. Leobellus made his Eſcape and lay conceal'd, hoping to prove both his Friend's and his own Innocence; but the Relations of Gelaſius had ſo great Intereſt in Wilna, that Octavius was try'd in a few Days after, and on the ſingle Evidence of of Mezafius condemn'd to loose his Head.

Accordingly he was led to the Scaffold, and the Executioner was upon the Point of doing his Office; when Leobelius, making Way thro' the Crowd, cry'd out to him to hold his Hand, left the Innocent suffer'd for the Guilty, for he was the only Author of the Death of Gelasius and of his Servant; and mounting the Scaffold, with an undaunted Countenance, he declar'd the whole Matter as it had pass'd to the Magistrates, who were present to see the Execution, and entirely clear'd his Friend, whom he requir'd might be releas'd, since he was ready to satisfy the Laws by laying down his Life. The Populace touch'd with this generous Action, began to cry Pardon, Pardon, and to threaten the Magistrates in a mutinous Manner if they proceeded; this oblig'd them to carry back the two Friends to the Hall and rehear the Cause.

The Palatine of Wilna, being inform'd of what had pass'd, would be present at this Rehearing, and found the two Friends generously contesting which should die to save the other; he examin'd every Circumstance to the Bottom; and heard with Pleasure and Surprize Leobellus plead for his Friend's Discharge: it is, said he, evident that I alone ought to suffer Death, since I alone am guilty, it's Man can be so term'd who kills another in Defence of his own Life and of that of his Friend, unjustly and basely attack'd. So far, reply'd the Palatine, am I from esteeming you guilty, that I cannot but term what you have done a glorious Action, which exacts the Praise of all who have a just and generous Way of thinking; I therefore not only acquit you both, but condemn Mezafius to lose his Head for his Treachery and Perjury, and request, as a Favour, to be admitted the third in your Friendship. Mezafius however escap'd by the Intercession of powerful Friends.

The Palatine not satisfy'd with this Act of Justice, by his Interest with Paulina's Parents, procur'd Offavius the Happiness he had long sigh'd for; marry'd Leobellus to a Relation of his own, and recommending them to the King of Poland, procur'd them very honourable Posts at Court.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Hague, Sept. 30. N. S.

IT seems that what principally frustrates all the Measures taken to attain an Armistice, is the Impossibility to find out proper Expedients, to remove the Difficulties, which occur in the Affair of Poland. The Maritime Powers were unwilling to charge themselves with the Inhibitory Clauses, France demanded, with Regard to the Dyet of Pacification, which King Augustus is assembling; because they could not but foresee, that that Prince and the Czarina would pretend to be under no more Restraint in Poland, than the Catholick King and Don Carlos in the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, where nothing is to hinder them of executing all the Acts of Sovereignty during the Armistice.

A second Difficulty, which could not be decided, is the Guaranty, demanded of the Maritime Powers for a General Armistice, which, it is said, they pretend to be incompatible with their good Offices they offered from the beginning, and which they are willing to continue; for, otherwise, the least Concession, Clause, or equivocating Expression, would not only overthrow the Edifice of the Peace, France so ardently desires; but involve even the Maritime Powers in a War, which they are desirous to avoid as long as they can.

Seeing then, it is morally impossible, that the Armistice so much desired can be brought about, it is said, that the Maritime Powers have confined themselves, to demand only, that the Mantuan be reserved to the Emperor, and that a Congress be forthwith assembled, wherein the different Pretensions may be discussed.

While this Proposition was making, we learnt, that in the last Council of War, holden in Lombardy, it was not only resolved to undertake the Siege of Mantua; but Preparations were even making for marching towards the Adige, and from thence to the Frontiers of the Tyroleze, with an Army of 50,000 Men divided in two Bodies to hinder the Imperialists of re-entring Italy.

This we have from good Hands. . . . It is well seen, that the March of the Allied Army in Italy, is in Concert with the Republick of Venice, where they have vast Magazines. 'Tis said, that the three Allied Crowns have concluded a secret Treaty with the said State, and that by Virtue thereof they are going to take Possession of the Castle of Verona, Pescara and other Places they shall judge proper upon the banks of the Lake de Garda; whereby they will entirely shut up all the Passages and render it impossible for the Imperialists to re enter Italy: 'Tis added, that to engage the Venetians to suffer the Allied Troops to take Winter Quarters in their Country; the three Crowns have promised them the City of Mantua upon certain Conditions after it is taken from the Emperor, in Confidence, that this Object will not cause any Umbrage to neither of the Allies. We can hardly give Credit, that such an Offer was made to the Venetians However, be it as it will, the Siege of Mantua will certainly take Place.

All the great Ideas of Prince Eugene's designed Passage of the Rhine, and his intending to give the French Battle, seem intirely vanished. He is still at Haidelberg, and has not yet abandoned Bruchsal, nor the Lines near that Place. The Imperialists have a Body of Troops on this Side the Rhine, which forrages below Mentz, towards Hillers, where the French have not been when they were in that Neighbourhood That body of Troops, we hear, is to penetrate towards the Moselle; but M. de Belleisle has a strong Detachment of Troops at Hand, to oppose any Attempt they can make to accomplish their Design. After all, Prince Eugene has not yet put any of his projected Enterprizes in Execution, or at least the good Conduct of the Marshal de Coigny breaks all his Highness's Measures, however concerted to gain any Advantage over the French Army. To say Truth, it is not believed, that he will be able to undertake any thing this Campagne, which is like to terminate about the Middle of next Month, in the same Inactivity wherein it continued from the Beginning. It will be enough for the French to have exhausted the Emperor by obliging him to maintain a great Army; all the Efforts of which they have rendered abortive, by keeping only upon the Defensive, which has been the End of the Politicks of the French Court this Year upon the Rhine; and they certainly had their intended Effect The French propose to march soon to Spireb ch, to finish the Campagne in the Lines they made there, and are almost impregnable. M. de Belleisle will then proceed to the Archbishoprick of Triers, and the Moselle, at the Head of a Body of Troops, sufficient to defend that Country against any Attempt.

LONDON, Sept. 30.

Yesterday arriv'd a Mail from Holland.

Our Letters from the Rhine advise, that on the 29th, N. S. Count Nesselroth return'd to the Imperial Camp, with the Emperor's last Orders in relation to the Winter Quarters: That Count Seckendorff began his March the next Day, and pass'd the Naw with the Troops under his Command: That he was to cross the Moselle into the Dutchy of Juliers, and continue his Rout through the Country of Limburg and the Bishoprick of Liege, in order to take Winter Quarters in the Netherlands: That Marshal Coigny had detach'd the Count de Belliste, with his Corps of Observation, to watch Count Seckendorff's Motions: but that as the latter had no Designs to gain any Footing in the Electorate of Treves, or in any Posts upon the Moselle, 'twas not believ'd the two Armies would come near each other. The Russians are to be canton'd in the Wirtemberg, to be at hand to make Incursions into Alsace. The King of Prussia has offer'd to provide Quarters in his own Country for his Troops in the Emperor's Service, provided his Imperial Majesty would advance him 500,000 Florins to defray the Expences; but most of the other Countries, as likewise the great Cities offer'd rather to advance great Fines than to be trouble with Troops.

Most of Prince Eugene's Baggage is already gone to Vienna, and his Highness expected very soon to follow. The Duke of Wirtemberg is already arriv'd in the Army, to be ready to take the Command.

'Tis certain his Imperial Majesty is extremely press'd for Money, and a Project is on the Carpet to order all the Nobility to send their Plate to the Mint by way of Loan, the Value of which is to be hereafter return'd them, and

Five

Five per Cent. per Annum Intereſt. His Imperial Majeſty pays his Intereſt to the Dutch in Quickſilver, the Produce of the Mines mortgag'd to them, and new Loans are negociating with great Aſſiduity.

The Duke of Noailles has permitted a Quantity of Oyl to enter Mantua, at the Requeſt of the Biſhop, under pretence for the uſe of the Church-Lamps.
